124) Define strategic planning. Discuss the steps involved.

Answer: The process of developing and maintaining a strategic fit between the organization's goals and capabilities and its changing marketing opportunities is called strategic planning. At the outset, beginning at the corporate level, each company must define its overall purpose and mission. What is our business? Who is the customer? What do our customers value? Answers to these questions are crucial in writing a clear mission statement. Mission statements need to be carefully defined in terms of customer needs. Missions should be realistic, motivating, and fit the market environment. Missions then lead to setting business and marketing objectives/goals in the planning process. This is followed by decisions regarding what portfolio of businesses and products is best for the company and how much support to give each one. Next, each business and product develops detailed marketing and other functional strategies. In this step, plans are drawn at the business unit, product, and market levels in support of company-wide plans.

125) What is business portfolio planning? Discuss how a company might use the Boston Consulting Group's product portfolio analysis method.

Answer: A business portfolio is the collection of businesses and products that make up the company. Business portfolio planning entails two steps. First, there is an analysis of the company's current business portfolio, followed by decisions about what businesses should receive more, less, or no investment. Second, planners must shape the future portfolio by developing strategies for growth and/or downsizing. The Boston Consulting Group matrix evaluates SBUs on two important dimensions: the attractiveness of the SBU's market or industry growth rate and the strength of the SBU's position or relative market share in that market or industry. The growth-share matrix defines four types of SBUs: stars, cash cows, question marks, and dogs. Once each SBU has been defined, a company can determine what role each will play in the firm's future, using strategies of building, holding, harvesting, or divesting each SBU.

126) What are some problems with matrix approaches?

Answer: The BCG and other portfolio planning approaches can be difficult to execute, time consuming, and also costly to implement. Defining SBUs and measuring relative market share and growth can be a difficult task as well. A serious flaw with these approaches is that, while they are helpful for classifying current businesses, they offer little or no advice for future planning. Also, the BCG and other formal methods are centralized, involving mainly upper management.

127) The BCG is a useful approach to evaluate current businesses. Describe a device that a firm could use to identify future growth opportunities.

Answer: The product/market expansion grid is a useful device for identifying growth opportunities in the future. It examines products, both current and new, against markets, both current and new. There are four strategies available to companies: market penetration, market development, product development, and diversification. Market penetration entails making more sales to current customers without changing products. Market development involves identifying and developing new markets for a company's products. New markets include demographic groups and geographic regions, among others. Companies can also consider product development, offering modified or new products to current markets. Diversifying companies might consider acquiring or starting new businesses unrelated to their core competencies.

However, diversifying too broadly can be detrimental in the long run.

128) Explain the term "value-delivery network"

Answer: For decades, marketers have traditionally created value to satisfy customer needs and wants. They did this through focusing on internal marketing departments and functions. Today, the manufacturer or retailer needs to look beyond its own value chain and into the value chains of suppliers and distributors to create value throughout the entire supply chain. More companies are partnering with other members of the supply chain to improve the performance of the customer value-delivery network. In fact, today competition takes place between entire value delivery networks instead of between individual competitors.

129) Define marketing strategy. Discuss the steps in formulating marketing strategy.

Answer: The marketing logic by which a company hopes to achieve profitable relationships is called its marketing strategy. Marketing strategy formulation entails four specific steps: market segmentation, market targeting, differentiation, and positioning. The process of dividing a market into distinct groups of buyers with different needs, characteristics, or behavior is called market segmentation. Market targeting involves evaluating each market segment's attractiveness and selecting one or more segments to enter. A company should target segments in which it can profitably generate the greatest customer value and sustain that value over time. Effective positioning begins with actually differentiating the company's marketing offer so that it gives consumers greater value. Positioning is defined as creating a distinct image of a product in the eyes of target consumers relative to the competition. A product's positioning should take advantage of a competitive difference within the market target.

130) Explain why, according to the authors of your text, the four Ps concept of the marketing mix takes a seller's view of the market, not the buyer's view. How should marketers consider the buyer's view?

Answer: The four Ps are described in terms of how the seller conceives of each; product, price, place, and promotions. In today's day and age of customer relationship marketing, the four Ps can be described as the four Cs from the customer's point of view. In lieu of product, there is customer solution; that is, customers buy solutions to their problems or look for value in products. In lieu of price, customer cost takes into consideration customers' interest in the total costs of obtaining, using, and disposing of a product. The place element of the marketing mix focuses on delivering the product to the right customer at the right time and place. Place can be redefined from the customer's point of view as how convenient it is to obtain a product. Finally, Promotions is not only what the company is doing to reach the customer, today is about customers communicating back to the company. Thus promotions is replaced by communication. Marketers should use the four Cs as a base for the four Ps of their marketing mix.

131) Define marketing planning. Briefly outline the major steps in a marketing plan.

Answer: Marketing planning involves deciding on marketing strategies that will help the company achieve its overall strategic objectives. A detailed marketing plan is needed at the business, product, or brand level. An executive summary is the first step in the plan. It contains a brief summary of the main goals and recommendations of the plan for management review. The main section of the plan presents a detailed SWOT analysis of the current marketing situation, along with potential threats and opportunities. The plan then states major objectives for the brand and outlines the specifics of a marketing strategy for achieving them. In addition, action programs for implementing the marketing strategy along with the details of a supporting marketing budget are presented. The final section outlines the controls used to monitor progress and corrective action.

132) Marketing departments are organized in several ways. Compare and contrast the most common forms of marketing organizations.

Answer: Some common forms of marketing department organization include functional organization, geographical organization, product management organization, and market management organization. Under a functional department organization, a functional specialist, such as a sales manager, advertising manager, or market research manager, is responsible for all marketing activities. Under a geographic organization, sales and marketing people are assigned to specific countries, regions, and districts. Product management organization first appeared at P&G in 1929. Under this approach, a product manager develops and implements a complete strategy and marketing program for a specific product or brand. Under a market or customer management organization, the company is organized around the needs of specific customer segments. In firms that use this organization, one product line is sold to many different types of markets and customers that have different needs and preferences. Finally, large companies that produce many products sold in many geographic areas typically use some combination of these organizational forms.

133) Briefly discuss how marketers measure return on marketing investment, explaining why this figure can be difficult to assess.

Answer: Marketing ROI (return on investment) is the net return from a marketing investment divided by the costs of the marketing investment. In other words, ROI is a measure of the profits generated by investments in a marketing activity. Marketing ROI can be difficult to assess because the benefits of marketing are not always easily translated in dollar amounts. However, marketing ROI can be assessed in terms of brand awareness, sales, or market share. Some companies are now using marketing dashboards, which are single displays showing several sets of marketing performance measures. And beyond standard performance measures, many marketers are using customer-centered measures such as customer acquisition, retention, and lifetime value.

Fun-Spot Fun Park began as a small amusement park in 1985. Starting with nothing more than a merry-go-round, a slide, pony rides, and an ice cream stand, Fun-Spot grew into a popular family attraction with 20 rides, a restaurant, and an outdoor performing arts theater.

"My wife, Gail, and I didn't know what we were getting into," commented Ron Hart, the owner. "We just knew that weekenders coming to the lakes in our rural area represented an untapped market."

Today, thousands of visitors flock to Fun-Spot—families, children of all ages, and even senior citizens who enjoy strolling through the gardens and arbor.

"There's something here for everyone," Gail Hart said with a smile. "Dozens of companies hold annual company picnics here. We have welcomed class field trips. And we even had one wedding here at the park!"

"Here's the funny thing," Ron chimed in. "We really don't know why we've been so successful! There is nothing else like Fun-Spot Fun Park in the area. We were just lucky."

"I think it's the ambience of the park," Gail added, "that has brought so many visitors. We provide a 'total package' of entertainment. Plus, we try to change our rides and various attractions from time to time."

Ron and Gail Hart admitted that making every visitor happy is a priority. "That has always been our philosophy," they said. "And we've always been able to deliver on that because we've never allowed ourselves to grow too big too quickly."

154) Describe two critical factors affecting the strategic plan at Fun-Spot.

Answer: A strategic plan is the process of developing and maintaining a strategic fit between the company's goals and capabilities and its changing marketing opportunities. From the case, it would seem that Ron and Gail did not have a strategic planning process in place: Ron said they "didn't know what we were getting into." Without a strategic plan the growth of the amusement park can be reactive to demand rather than proactive by the owners. Ron and Gail's continued success will depend on clearly defining the company's mission, then setting SMART objectives that follow their company's mission, and designing the business portfolio with a focus on creating value for visitors of Fun-Spot.

155) Would you consider Fun-Spot's mission statement to be market oriented? Explain.

Answer: A mission statement defines the company's purpose—what it wants to accomplish in the larger environment. The mission at Fun-Spot seems to be "making every visitor happy." It is defined in terms of customer needs, so it is market oriented. Rather than focusing on the entertainment provided, Fun-Spot focuses on the customer. Providing the fastest roller coaster, the greatest variety of ice cream flavors, or the scariest spook house is not as important, for example, as providing top-notch customer attention and attractions appealing to a variety of visitors at this small, rural park.

156) At this point, how do Ron and Gail monitor Fun-Spot's business portfolio?

Answer: A growth-share matrix is a portfolio planning method that evaluates a company's SBU's in terms of its market growth and relative market share. It seems the only way Ron and Gail make a continuous assessment of Fun-Spot's business portfolio is to note the number of visitors. They do not seem to have a strategic plan for evaluating their objectives, strategies or tactics and they do not plan or seek out opportunities in the environment "We really don't know why we've been so successful! There is nothing else like Fun-Spot Fun Park in the area. We were just lucky." If a competitor should appear within a relatively close distance, for example, Ron and Gail will likely have to alter the business portfolio to offset the competition.

157) Into which quadrant of the BCG matrix does Fun-Spot fall? Why?

Answer: Fun-Spot Fun Park is a star, defined as a high-growth, high-share position. As mentioned in the case, "Fun-Spot Fun Park began as a small amusement park in 1985. Starting with nothing more than a merry-go-round, a slide, pony rides, and an ice cream stand, Fun-Spot grew into a popular family attraction with 20 rides, a restaurant, and an outdoor performing arts theater." "Today, thousands of visitors flock to Fun-Spot—families, children of all ages, and even senior citizens who enjoy strolling through the gardens and arbor." We assume that there is even more potential for growth since the number of visitors continue to rise. Fun-Spot Park has all the market share in the area since, as Ron states, "There is nothing else like Fun-Spot Fun Park in the area."

158) How might Ron and Gail implement a market penetration strategy at Fun-Spot?

Answer: A market penetration strategy is one where a company sells more to the same target customer without changing their current offerings. Ron and Gail would maintain their current entertainment offering and continue to deliver customer attention to their existing customers, but might improve advertising or lower prices in an effort to encourage customers to stay longer, visit more often, and spend more money during each visit.

159) In what way do Ron and Gail currently implement a product development strategy at Fun-Spot?

Answer: A product development strategy is where a company grows by developing new offerings to the same target customer. The owners at Fun-Spot strive to provide new offerings and entertainment options for their visitors. As Gail said, "We provide a 'total package' of entertainment. Plus, we try to change our rides and various attractions from time to time."

160) What are three possible emerging conditions that may cause the Harts to develop a downsizing strategy at Fun-Spot?

Answer: A downsizing strategy eliminates products or business units that are no longer profitable or no longer fit a company's overall strategy. Downsizing would be an appropriate strategy for Fun-Spot if (1) one or more competitors set up entertainment parks close by; or (2) the cost of maintaining live animals such as ponies eliminates profits; or (3) the target audience has found other more appealing forms of family entertainment.

161) Who comprises Fun-Spot's target markets?

Answer: The target market is a market segment in which a company can profitably generate the greatest customer value and sustain it overtime. It seems that the target market for Fun-SPot includes anyone who desires a relaxing, fun day or evening at a small amusement park—"families, children of all ages, and even senior citizens who enjoy strolling through the gardens and arbor." People/companies needing to host special events are also market segments: "Dozens of companies hold annual company picnics here. We have welcomed class field trips. And we even had one wedding here at the park!"

162) If you had to select a primary market segment that is crucial to the success of Fun-Spot, who would it be? Why?

Answer: The primary target market is the market segment that regularly results in a profit for the company and that the company can create value for the customer with their resources. From the case it would appear that Fun-Spot likely relies most on families with children for a steady stream of revenues.

163) What role do service products play at Fun-Spot?

Answer: Service products are the intangible aspect associated with customer products. For Fun-Spot, services are the experiences visitors have, including the ambience of the park. Visitor experiences are directly tied to such products as the 20 rides, the restaurant, and the outdoor performing arts theater.
